Six key ingredients for proactive conservation learned from the Sage Grouse Initiative and applicable for wildlife conservation anywhere:

1. Shared vision: Finding the common link that invites cooperation over conflict. Our shared vision is what's good for the rangelands is good for the grouse.

2. Strategic: Direct resources where the returns are highest. SGI overwhelmingly benefits large populations by targeting three-fourths of investments inside priority areas.

3. Accountability: Use science to guide conservation, assuring that practices are achieving their goals with cost-efficiency and effectiveness.

4. Leverage: Multiply investments through partnerships that focus on what unites rather than what divides. NRCS SGI investment of $296.5 million matched by $128 million from partners resulting in a total SGI contribution of $424.5 million.

5. Certainty: Provide peace of mind to landowners that they can enact conservation in the future without additional regulations.

6. Trust & Credibility: Take a community, grass-roots approach that’s based on the principles of neighborliness with 1120 ranchers participating across 11 western states.
